Three days before hotly contested national elections, Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert drew tens of thousands of people to the National Mall on Saturday with a blend of jokes and music meant to counter some of the anger and fear they see in the country.

The Rally to Restore Sanity and/or Fear, with barbs pointed at popular culture, politicians and especially cable TV news—was an attempt to coax Americans back to a more civil way of disagreeing.

“This is not ... to suggest that times are not difficult and that we have nothing to fear. They are and we do,” Stewart said as he turned serious in his closing remarks. “But we live now in hard times, not end times. We can have animus and not be enemies.”

He lambasted the cable TV news mentality that amplifies outrageous statements, stokes fear and seeks out confrontation, singling out the left-wing media for equating Tea Partiers with racists and the right-wing

THE UNOFFICIAL COUNT

Turnout at the rally was estimated by organizers at more than 250,000, but the figure was not confirmed by local or federal authorities, who do not estimate crowd sizes. An aerial estimate by CBS News estimated 215,000 attended, plus or minus 10 percent. LOS ANGELES TIMES media for “the inability to distinguish terrorists from Muslims.”

“The press can hold its magnifying glass up to our problems,” he said. “Or they can use that magnifying glass to light ants on fire. ... The press is our immune system. If they overreact to everything, we get sicker.”

The message struck a chord with the large throng of people; the National Park Service no longer provides official estimates of crowds, but the National Mall was densely packed with many tens of thousands of people.

The rally took on a festive air, with many wearing costumes and carrying irreverent signs. Among the signs: “Give please a chance,” “Stir Peanut Butter, Not Anger” and “Does this sign make my butt look big?” The O’Jays sang their ’70s hit, “Love Train.” Actor Sam Waterston read a satiric poem about a man who refused to be scared, who would not share in “the panic over His-panics,” and ended up killed by a bear.

Other entertainers included Sheryl Crow, Ozzy Osbourne, the Roots and actor Don Novello, who portrayed Father Guido Sarducci, a character from “Saturday Night Live” in the 1970s and 1980s.

With its blend of music and jokes, the rally tapped into a growing trend in which entertainment and popular culture blend with politics. One out of 10 Americans now gets his or her latest headlines straight from Stewart’s “Daily Show,” according to a summer poll by the non-partisan Pew Research Center.

Gaming case hits Supreme Court

MCT

Supreme Court justices will meet “Resident Evil 4” on Tuesday in a divisive free speech case that’s rated M for mature.

Eleven states, including Florida and Texas, have joined California in urging the court to uphold a law that bans the sale of violent video games to minors. These states say that young people need moral and psychological protection.

But in an intriguing political split, eight states—including Washington and South Carolina—want California’s law buried. The interstate conflict foreshadows a provocative debate Tuesday, though the judicial odds seem to favor unfettered video gaming.

“I’d be surprised if the court ... upholds the California statute,” said Peter Edelman, a professor at Georgetown University Law Center. “Maybe the court won’t be unanimous, but it would be a major departure if they hold it constitutional.”

The hourlong oral argument Tuesday morning and subsequent court decision will move beyond the $10 billion-a-year video game industry. If the Supreme Court sides with California’s law, the ruling could invite restrictions on books, movies and the Internet in general.

“Restricting access to video games would ... deprive game developers and those who play their games of a critical instrument for expressing and exercising their creativity,” Theodore Olson, who was the solicitor general during the George W. Bush administration, declared in a brief filed for Microsoft.

Microsoft, among many others, has money as well as principles at stake. The Washington state-based corporate giant developed the Xbox and Xbox 360 video game consoles. It also developed big-selling games, such as “Halo,” that could feel the chill from the case called Schwarzenegger v. Entertainment Merchants Association.

Schwarzenegger is California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who made his Hollywood bones starring in ultra-violent make-believe flicks such as “Conan the Barbarian” and the “Terminator” series. Now, though, he’s the titular defender of the state law that passed in 2005 but never has taken effect.

TWEET OF THE WEEK

@Richter_Andy:
Got so excited by CNN headline "Monster Storms Across U.S.," then so bummed when I found out it was just about the stupid weather.

Honestly, better than Foursquare

I was on Foursquare before most people even heard of Foursquare. I loved being mayor of multiple venues and took the game seriously.

A few months ago I stopped playing for the most part. The service often was down and cheaters began to take the fun out of it.

And then the other night, someone I know on Facebook and 94 others checked in to that storm of the century that's been all over the news. Yep. The "Great Lakes Cyclone" was the most popular venue on Foursquare.

It's bad enough that you can't check in to a storm, but even worse it was created on the North Side of Chicago when the storm was in North Dakota.

Cheaters!

At that point, I was done. I was done before, but this sealed the deal for me.

All good. I've found the next big thing, SCVNGR (sounds like scavenger). Like Foursquare, it's location-based. Using an iPhone or Android-powered phone, you check in to places but you do challenges to earn points such as posting a comment about a location or taking a photo. And there are Treks based on cities. For example, a Taco Trek requires you to visit 11 spots for tacos across the city.

SCVNGR reminds me of a young Foursquare but so much better. The site is stable and the GPS is accurate. When you try to check in somewhere and you're too far away, you're denied access. That's a good thing.

As an early adopter, I'm constantly looking for friends to play along with. I might have some company soon. Last month, the Chicago Office of Tourism and more than 50 Chicago companies joined the excitement. From Wow Bao, where taking a certain kind of photo earns you points toward free food, to Wormhole Coffee in Wicker Park, there are plenty of ways to play and be rewarded for doing so.

The toughest places to use SCVNGR to its fullest potential and earn the most points are at places you're in and out of. Sure, you can earn one point just for checking in—that takes no time at all—but you can earn many more by taking photos and doing other things. That can be a little challenging when you go to Starbucks or the bank—although you probably don't want to be snapping too many photos at a bank.

While Foursquare still has honest players, it's getting harder for those honest people to enjoy the game because of people checking in to storms and traffic lights. The worst part is Foursquare doesn't have a problem with it—they encourage users to be creative. But there's a fine line between creativity and dishonesty.

So if you want to get in on the ground floor and try something fun, download SCVNGR. You can read more about it online too at scvngr.com. And when you sign up, search for me.

What's your latest social media obsession? Tweet me, poke me—just tell me. Obsessions always are more fun when you share.

HALLOWEEN TRAGEDY

TEACHER, 23, DIES IN FALL AT PALMER HOUSE HILTON DURING HAUNTED HOTEL BALL

Chicago Tribune

Megan Duskey was looking forward to a Saturday night out in Chicago with some of her best friends.

The Chicago school-teacher and a group of girlfriends she had known most of her life had scored tickets to a sold-out Haunted Hotel Ball at the Palmer House Hilton, and Duskey was going as glamorous superhero Silk Spectre from the movie "Watchmen."

Duskey, 23, and her friends were there half an hour when she playfully attempted to slide down a banister rail and fell four stories to her death, the Cook County medical examiner's office said.

"We had just gotten there," said Ellie Pessetto, a friend of Duskey's from childhood who had stepped away from the stairwell moments before Duskey fell. When Pessetto returned to the stairs, she saw two of her friends crumpled to the floor, in hysterics.

"I couldn't even understand what they were saying," Pessetto said. "Then someone said [Megan] fell."

A cousin of Duskey had raced down the stairs and was holding Duskey's body when

Megan Duskey

The medical examiner said Megan Duskey died instantly of head trauma. Alcohol was not a factor in the accident, police said. Palmer House staff directed questions to the Chicago Police Department. Event promoters Global Adrenaline and Surreal Chicago did not respond to requests for comment on Sunday.

The Palmer House Hilton was the site of an accident Saturday night when Megan Duskey, a 23-year-old teacher attending the Haunted Hotel Ball, fell to her death. Police said alcohol was not a factor in the accident. HEATHER CHARLES/TRIBUNE firefighters arrived, Pessetto said. Later, they noticed a mark on the cousin's arm where firefighters had pulled her away from Duskey.

"[The cousin] just said, 'She's gone.' She knew she was gone," Pessetto said.

The fall took place at 10:30 p.m., bringing an end to the ball just hours after it had begun.

The party, which had been set to run until 2 a.m. with more than 2,000 guests, included reserved tables that cost more than $1,000 apiece. Duskey and her group, which included a cousin, a college roommate and other close friends, got tickets from a friend whose company had paid for a table, Pessetto said.

"We were excited. It was a party in Chicago," said Pessetto, her eyes red from crying as she sat in the living room of her parents' house a few doors down from the Duskey family in south suburban Crete. "There was nothing going on around here [in Crete]."

Duskey taught special education classes at Bright Elementary School, 10740 S. Calhoun Ave. Crisis counselors will be at the Far South Side school Monday, Chicago Public Schools spokeswoman Monique Bond said.

Duskey loved children and talked constantly about her preschool students at Bright, Pessetto said.

"She just loved kids," Pessetto said. "She didn't always know what she wanted to do. But she always worked with kids, so [teaching] was just natural."

Jesse Jackson expresses solidarity with Jewish community after bomb threat

Chicago Tribune

The Rev. Jesse Jackson and a North Side rabbi met Sunday in a show of solidarity after packages containing explosives bound for different Jewish houses of worship in Chicago were intercepted overseas.

"The fact is that while synagogues here in Chicago were targeted, the reality is that when a house of worship is under threat in this country, all houses of worship are threatened," said Anshe Emet's Rabbi Michael Siegel. "This is a time for solidarity."

The rabbi said federal agents came by the Conservative Jewish synagogue in Lakeview on Friday night, though he didn't know if his synagogue was one of the targets.

On Sunday morning, Jackson stopped at the synagogue and spoke to the congregation.

"We went by the temple just to share our concern [and] the sense of anxiety, driven by the fact there was a bomb headed this way," Jackson said.

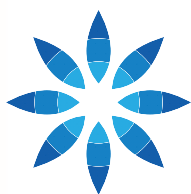

Jackson said he chose to visit Siegel's synagogue because it may have been targeted by the terrorists.

The gathering, Jackson pointed out, could have been a "mourning service" instead.

"We cannot be casual about the fact that somebody planned to kill some people," Jackson said. "They got caught, but they planned to kill some people. They planned to kill some Jews."

Obama surprises Hyde Park cafeteria

Chicago Tribune

President Obama made a surprise stop Sunday morning at the Valois cafeteria, a storied Hyde Park diner that advertises the slogan “See Your Food.”

The president, who was joined by Gov. Quinn and Democratic Senate nominee Alexi Giannoulias, shook hands and ordered pancakes, eggs and turkey sausage to go after arriving at the restaurant about 10 a.m. Giannoulias ordered French toast and Quinn asked for some scrambled eggs and sausage, all to go.

“I feel great. If we got good turnout, Pat’s gonna win, Alexi’s going to win,” he said, voicing support for Quinn and Giannoulias. “That’s why turnout is so important.”

Having ordered, the president moved down the counter, where a food server, Barbara Davis, positioned herself before him, telling reporters, “Excuse me guys, I’ve got to wait on the president.”

Obama insisted on paying, pulling out a wad of cash wrapped in a $20 bill. He later took some questions from local TV reporters, and, as he left the restaurant about 10:22 a.m., the president called out, “Everybody, remember to vote!”

The president left Chicago later in the morning and arrived in Cleveland about 1:30 p.m.

On Saturday night after a Democratic rally at the Midway Plaisance in Hyde Park, Obama went to River North, where he dined at Topolobampo with friends Marty Nesbitt and Eric Whitaker. The dinner lasted nearly three hours, and the president got back to his Kenwood home just before midnight.

Police announce 35 arrests

Chicago police on Sunday announced 35 arrests and the confiscation of 18 guns in response to recent violent crimes that have occurred on the South Side and Far South Side. The police narcotics section, with the assistance of the gang enforcement and gang intelligence units, obtained and executed 52 search warrants at various locations.

7 hostages at church killed in Iraq standoff

4 BAGHDAD Iraqi security forces stormed a Catholic church Sunday where gunmen were holding worshippers hostage, ending the hours-long standoff, police officials said Sunday.

At least seven hostages were killed in the incident. Another 20 people were wounded, the officials said. Eight suspects were arrested.

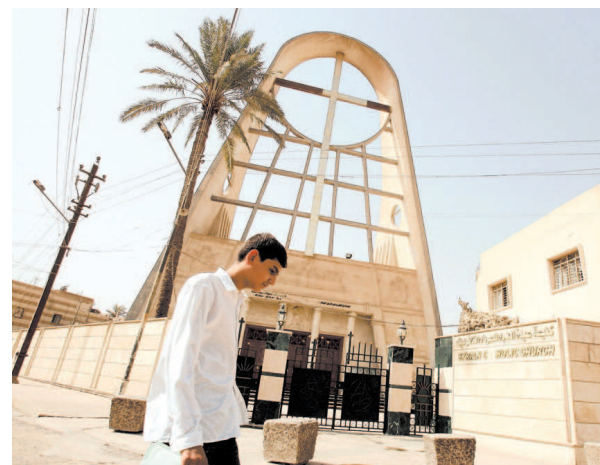

Survivors of the ordeal said they were just about to begin Sunday night services when the gunmen entered the church, according to Martin Chulov, a journalist for the U.K.-based Guardian newspaper who was on the scene. About 50 people were inside the church at the time, and a priest ushered them into a back room.

At one point, one of the gunmen entered the room and threw an unidentified explosive device inside, causing some casualties, Chulov said.

The gunmen seized the hostages after attacking the Baghdad Stock Market, in the central part of the Iraqi capital, earlier Sunday, police said. Four armed men entered the nearby Sayidat al-Nejat church after clashing with Iraqi security forces trying to repel the stock market attack.

The gunmen were demanding that the Iraqi government release a number of detainees and prisoners inside Iraqi prisons, saying the Christian hostages would be freed in return, according to the police officials.

Iraqi security forces sealed off the area surrounding the church, the officials said, and buildings were evacuated of civilians as precautionary measures. At least 13 hostages, including two children, managed to escape ahead of the security operation, police said.

The Iraqi authorities ordered the attackers to release the hostages and to turn themselves in, warning that they would storm the church if they do not comply.

A large firefight followed by several explosions preceded the hostages' release, Chulov said.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor & Statistics predicts faster-than-average job growth for psychology professionals, with the 10-year growth rate expected to be double-digit for psychologists and for counselors. Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

You'll enjoy some sexy chat, courtesy of sassy Mars. You'll find yourself making lusty suggestions to someone you've known barely a week.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

Your honey might need to vent about something, so you should listen and make supportive noises. Even if you don't really care, Mercury says be nice.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

You're in lust with someone who is totally wrong for you, and you also adore someone who doesn't quite do it for you, sexually speaking. The moon has you agonizing over which relationship to pursue.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

Jupiter has you focusing on work, even though your lover requires more of your attention. Remind your sweetheart that you can't be there for her 24 hours a day.

Aries March 21-April 19

A moon opposition is inspiring you to do some soul searching. Maybe it's not too late to become an astronaut.

Taurus April 20-May 20

You might hear from a former lover. Venus is creating sexual intrigue. You'll have to decide whether a late-night meeting makes sense or if it would be total insanity.

Gemini May 21-June 21

You're obsessed with what's fair and what's right, thanks to Saturn increasing your desire for justice. But if your ex was a jerk, don't waste energy trying to get him or her to admit it.

Cancer June 22-July 22

Your honey might treat you to something wonderful as Mercury enhances your charms. You could be taken out for a marvelous dinner, invited to a concert or given a gift.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

Sometimes you tend to stick to the same old, same old in the bedroom. Neptune is encouraging you to be creative.

Virgo

Aug. 23-Sept. 22

A bouncy moon has you dying for attention. If you're single, dress in your sexiest outfit and go out to your favorite club.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

You might need to have "the talk" with someone as Saturn inspires you to get some things off your chest.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! Scorpio

Oct. 24-Nov. 21

The new moon in your sign could provide you with a sexual breakthrough. At last, you'll find your partner's pleasure center. Things are looking up.

Still in the haunt

NFC rivals can bring bad news, even during a Bears bye week

RedEye

NFL bye weeks give players and coaches a chance to recuperate, spend time with family, even get out of town for a while. For Bears fans, it was a chance to calm down after two frightening home losses and see if the team could emerge alone in first place without even stepping on the field Sunday. It's never too early to see how the playoffs stack up, so RedEye trick-or-treated around key NFC games to see how the Bears' outlook changed on Halloween.

TRICK Green Bay 9, N.Y. Jets 0

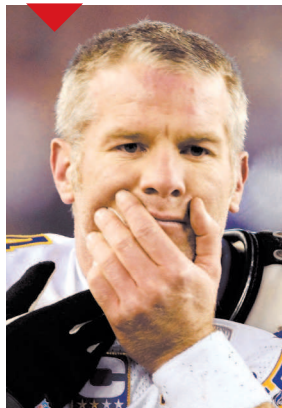

Bears fans were hoping New York would knock the Packers (5-3) out of first place in the NFC North, but instead Green Bay (above) pulled ahead by a half-game. The Jets missed a 37-yard field goal, turned the ball over three times and failed to get a first down on a fake punt in their own territory. This must be why Chicagoans are so irritated by New Yorkers.

TREAT Oakland 33, Seattle 3

A win over the Bears on Oct. 17 helped lift Seattle into first place in the NFC West. All will be well if the Seahawks (4-3) widen the gap in this division. It helps that Arizona (3-4) lost Sunday, further lowering the bar for whomever wins the lackluster West.

TREAT
Detroit 37, Washington 25
Washington had muscled its way into playoff contention by beating the Bears last week, but Detroit knocked Donovan McNabb's crew down a peg Sunday. With the N.Y. Giants (5-2) and Philadelphia (4-3) leading the NFC East, it's doubtful the Redskins (4-4) will be heard from again.

TREAT New England 28, Minnesota 18

Bears' and Packers' mediocrity gives them hope to rejoin the NFC North race.

Is this the end for Brett Favre? He left the game in the fourth quarter Sunday with a face laceration. And when you have the same record as Detroit (2-5) this late in the season, as the Vikings do, "desperate" barely covers your situation. Only the

TRICK
Tampa Bay 38, Arizona 35
Atlanta (5-2) looks like the cream of the NFC South crop, so the more games lost by the Buccaneers (above) the better. Tampa Bay's (5-2), unexpected success could hinder the Bears' wild-card hopes.

Payton's still sweetest

Thankfully, the Bears being on a bye this week prevented them from making any embarrassing headlines. But one former Bear's name did come up, a legend Chicago fans never tire of discussing: Walter Payton.

The running back called "Sweetness" had been the only player in NFL history to amass 13,000 yards rushing and 4,000 receiving. On Sunday, the N.Y. Jets' LaDainian Tomlinson became the second man to eclipse both milestones. He now has 13,334 yards rushing and 4,099 receiving; Payton's still ahead with 16,726 and 4,538, respectively.

Think of all the great players who lack this accomplishment: Emmitt Smith, Barry Sanders, Jim Brown ... the list goes on. Now, feel free to again bask in the all-around awesomeness that is Payton's legacy.

There, isn't that better than thinking about how the Bears fell out of first place? Oops, sorry.

OH YES!

Detroit (2-5) is a long way from sniffing a playoff spot this year. But if Matthew Stafford and Calvin "Megatron" Johnson keep putting up numbers like this, they'll be in striking distance in no time. Stafford threw four touchdown passes—including three to Johnson, who had 101 yards receiving—in guiding the Lions to a comeback win over Washington.

OH NO!

Cincinnati receiver Chad Ochocinco caught just three passes for 34 yards in the Bengals' loss to Miami on Sunday and has just two touchdown catches this season. Can a Twitter rant be far behind?

UH-OH!

The only thing worse than having Rex Grossman fill in for you when you're hurt? Getting replaced by him when you're healthy. That apparently is what happened to Washington's Donovan McNabb late in Sunday's loss to Detroit. Grossman proceeded to fumble on his first play, and Lions defensive end Ndamukong Suh took it in for a touchdown. Darned if you do ...

1 What should the Big Ten name its two divisions?

West: Wildcat Country. East: East Wildcat Country. Go Cats!

The "We Did This" and the "For The Money" divisions.

Big Ten actually has four divisions but they say they only have two.

The Big 8 and the Little 4. It'd be appropriate for a conference that has trouble counting.

Hot and Perky. Just like coffee.

2 Now that the Bears' bye week is over ...

... the Jay Cutler-Kristin Cavallari alert level has eased down to "yellow."

... I can stop watching these terrible political ads and get back to watching terrible football.

... can we say bye bye to Jerry and Lovie?

... it's still more fun watching the Hawks and Bulls.

... I'm likely to get more action on Mondays.

3 What awaits the Blackhawks in New York?

Bloggers who shun them in favor of an edgier, more obscure brand of hockey from Canada.

Uniqlo and Shake Shack. Think they can bring me some stuff back?

Rangers won't score less than the Jets. Thanks for the help, Rex.

The new Spider-Man musical, if they have any free time.

Bagels at a deli, I'm guessing.

4 How can you tell college basketball teams are gearing up?

John Calipari's legal team has updated its Facebook status to "showtime."

Alums of terrible football schools have something to talk about on Mondays (looking at you, Duke).

An old, crazy bald man is shouting about 18-year-olds again.

Northwestern still looks no closer to reaching the NCAA Tournament.

Unlike during baseball season, no one's using me as a spittoon.

5 All the chaos in college football is ...

... not actually chaos. Believe it or not, the top teams are out west.

... exactly how it should be. Parity means every week is a must-watch.

... dumber than Charlie Sheen.

... maddening when it spells doom for my Missouri Tigers, as it did this week.

... making me prone to spills.

Demi Moore

GETTY IMAGES FILE

Iowa to NCAA: Hoops recruits met Ashton, Demi

Universities normally are more than happy to have celebrities parade around the sidelines of football games. Every time a TV camera lands on a famous face, it's free publicity.

But when stars get caught up in recruiting, that's publicity that schools can do without.

On Sunday, The Des Moines Register reported that the University of Iowa had admitted to recruiting violations involving Ashton Kutcher and his wife, Demi Moore.

According to documents filed with the NCAA, Iowa athletic officials said they allowed two prep recruits to meet the film stars during a home football game in September. The Register said it obtained the report under the state's public records law.

The NCAA does not allow high school recruits to have contact with individuals considered to represent a university's athletic interests because of the potential influence boosters can have on recruiting.

Iowa officials said they are waiting on the NCAA's response to the report. In the meantime, they assert that the violations should be considered inadvertent contact and, therefore, secondary violations.

Although the recruits' names were not on the records obtained by The Register, published reports have quoted Josh Oglesby, a senior at Cedar Rapids Washington High School, and Marcus Paige, a junior at Linn-Mar High School, as saying they met Kutcher and Moore on Sept. 11 at the Iowa-Iowa State game.

Oglesby has announced his verbal commitment to Iowa. Paige has not made a verbal commitment; in addition to Iowa, he is being recruited by Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota, among other schools. In Division I, basketball players can sign letters of intent beginning Nov. 10.

HEY, ISN'T THAT ...

Ashton Kutcher (who also is an unabashed Bears fan) and Demi Moore aren't the only celebrities who are proud to wear school colors. Here are other stars whose loyalties are well-documented:

INDIANA: John Mellencamp
NOTRE DAME: Regis Philbin

Westwood is followed in the rankings by Woods and Martin Kaymer.

Steak MY DAY

How the city's newest steakhouses fit into an already crowded scene

By Lisa Arnett

When a trio of steakhouses opened their doors in River North this year, we couldn't help but ask: Why, oh why, do we need another steakhouse? From the wood-paneled walls and cigar smoke-laden past of classics such as Gene & Georgetti to more contemporary entries like David Burke's Primehouse to Brazilian steakhouses like Fogo de Chao slicing off unlimited portions, it seems like we have plenty of meat to go around.

But believe it or not, Chicago doesn't belong to the U.S. region that consumes the most steak. Out of the 887 million servings of steak Americans ate from Sept. 1, 2009 to Aug. 31, the Southern U.S.—which, yes, includes Texas—has us beat by 17 percent, according to market research company the NPD Group.

Statistics don't trump our long relationship with steak, though. "You go back to the days of the stockyards; there's always been an association of the Midwest with beef," says Eric Giandelone, director of food service research at Mintell, a global consumer and market research organization. Chicago being a major financial center also fuels steakhouses, seen not only as special-occasion spots but also as "the accepted place of business" for wining and dining clients, he says. And in a dining scene of cycling trends, the steakhouse is classic.

This year's crop of steakhouses have plenty in common. All three are owned by men. None of them does that elaborate at-the-table schpeal showcasing each cut of plastic-wrapped meat. They all serve USDA prime beef and each menu follows roughly the same traditional format: seafood-heavy appetizers, then steaks, plus huge family-style side dishes served a la carte. So what does set them apart? Read on for the beefy truth.

Bone-in filet mignon at Benny's Chop House
LENNY GILMORE / REDEYE

Benny's Chop House

444 N. Wabash Ave. 312-626-2444

Opened: April 1

Steak philosophy: Tons of choices. There are wet-aged, dry-aged, regular and bone-in cuts, plus all-natural USDA prime steaks. Sticking to just one kind of aging would be "like going into a cupcake shop and only offering chocolate," says director of operations Mitchell Schmieding. Natural steaks come from farm-raised cattle that eat not just grass but whatever greens are in season, from clover to alfalfa. "If [a cow] eats grasses once they're gray and dry, that's what it's going to taste like," he says.

Preparation: A dash of salt and pepper before hitting the grill for those tell-tale crisscross marks. The owners: Benny Siddu, owner of Italian restaurant Volare, and Vince Naccarato, once-owner of cookware company Wilton Enterprises.

Must-try steak: The all-natural filet ($34.99 for 7-ounce, $42.99 for 10-ounce), which has more marbling (which, most say, equals more flavor) than its grain-fed counterparts. "We've had ... blind taste-testing with the staff, and hands down, natural has won every time," Schmieding says.

Most traditional steakhouse quality: Massive wine lockers

Least traditional qualities: The surprising lack of booths (only four in the whole place) and contemporary appetizers such as foie gras with forest mushrooms, crispy pork belly and huckleberries.

Biggest steak: 32-ounce porterhouse ($79.99)

Did you know? Despite Benny's fancy vibe, there's no dress code. "More often than not we'll have guests walk in ... and say, 'Are we dressed OK to eat in here?'" Schmieding says. "You can come off the golf course; you can be in your Bears jersey; you can be in shorts."

Chicago Cut Steakhouse

300 N. La Salle St. 312-329-1800

Opened: Sept. 20

Steak philosophy: Steaks are dry-aged on-site for 35 to 40 days. Beef is raised by four ranchers in Nebraska and Kansas who specialize in cattle for dry-aging, a process that removes water from the meat to intensify the flavor. "You have an essence of earthiness or nuttiness to the steak," says co-owner David Flom. "Traditionally dry-aging is something that came from Europe and a lot of the New York steakhouses."

Preparation: Seasoned with sea salt and fresh-ground black pepper and caramelized to a golden-brown crust on a 1,800-degree charbroiler.

The owners: David Flom opened Rosebud Steakhouse with owner Alex Dana and also served as wine buyer for the Rosebud group; Matt Moore served as beverage director at Smith & Wollensky before moving on to work at Rosebud Steakhouse and Rosebud Prime.

Must-try steak: The 24-ounce bone-in filet mignon ($51), aka the "Chicago cut," the restaurant's namesake. "We actually shave the bone so the marrow is exposed, and then once the meat starts cooking, the cook will go in and actually brush the marrow on top of the meat to enhance the flavor."

Most traditional steakhouse quality: Myriad wine options

Least traditional qualities: Floor-to-ceiling windows flooding the whole place with sunshine and wine lists distributed via iPads

Biggest steak: 55-ounce double-cut bone-in ribsteak ($90)

Did you know? Chicago Cut's butcher-style steak knives are custom-made in Germany and feature a straight edge to slice through the meat rather than the traditional serrated edge, which actually tears the meat, bleeding out some of the flavor, Flom says.

A VERY MEATY HISTORY

ALL ABOUT AGING

Aging allows time for enzymes to break down, resulting in more tender meat. But there are two schools of thought when it comes to how to do it: Wet-aged: Meat is vacuum-sealed in its own juices to retain moisture.

Dry-aged: Meat is hung in a cooler to evaporate moisture from the muscle and concentrate flavor.

How do you like your steak?

Metromix and RedEye asked our Twitter followers and Facebook friends how they like their steak done.

Mastro's Steakhouse

520 N. Dearborn St. 312-521-5100

Opened: Oct. 22. This is the sixth Mastro's Steakhouse, with other locations in Arizona and Southern California.

Steak philosophy: Steaks are wet-aged for 28 days. Just as important as the meat is Mastro's supper-club slant featuring nightly live music (think musicians crooning everything from Sinatra to Sting). Mastro's President and CEO Tom Heymann doesn't consider the experience complete without both. "To hear just 'That was the best steak I ever had' without hearing 'I had so much fun,' you know what, that would be a missing element to me," he says.

Preparation: Seasoned with a "secret" rub before hitting the 1,800-degree Montague broiler, steaks are served on a 400-degree sizzling plate with a touch of butter and parsley.

The owners: Heymann formed Levy Restaurants with Mark and Larry Levy in the late '70s. In 2007, he acquired Mastro's from the founding family of the same name with business partner Mark Levy.

Must-try steak: Bone-in filet ($43 for 12-ounce, $49 for 18-ounce)

Most traditional steakhouse quality: Sending customers home with leftovers. You may have spotted Mastro's trademark shopping bags on "Entourage."

Least traditional qualities: Martinis garnished with dry ice for a dramatic smoky effect, and a bar that's less waiting area and more the center of the action, thanks to the live music. Two separate dining rooms are available for quieter meals.

Biggest steak: 48-ounce double-cut porterhouse ($86)

Did you know? Heymann grew up next door to Morton's founder Arnold Morton and his family.

GOT A TIP?

Do you have a hot tip on a celebrity sighting in Chicago? E-mail Luis or tweet him @luisarroyave.

All Chicago's a stage

Rather than film "The Vow"—a romantic drama starring Channing Tatum and Rachel McAdams—entirely in Chicago, which is where the movie is based, the cast and crew shot the movie in Toronto and wrapped up last week with a three-day shoot in Chicago to capture some of the city's iconic images.

(Tatum and McAdams were seen filming under The Bean in Millennium Park.)

This might have bothered the Chicago Film Office in the past—it did when the Oscar-winning movie "Chicago" chose to shoot in Toronto—but not this year. The city already has hosted six TV pilots, the Ron Howard-directed "The Dilemma" and that one sequel about the robots in disguise.

"It's definitely been one of the best years we've had," said Rich Moskal, director of the Chicago Film Office.

The virus outbreak thriller "Contagion" began shooting in the Chicago area two weeks ago (they've filmed at the Shedd Aquarium, Crimson Lounge and the Chicago Board of Trade) and is expected to keep the cameras rolling here through mid-December.

The story takes place in several U.S. cities and towns, including Chicago. According to Moskal, one of the reasons many Chicago suburbs will be used is because they'll be doubling as various cities and towns across the country.

The movie is heavy on A-listers (Matt Damon, Kate Winslet, Jude Law, Gwyneth Paltrow, Laurence Fishburne), but it could be a challenge to get a glimpse of them in action. Unlike "Transformers 3," which closed down some of Chicago's busiest streets, "Contagion" will film mostly inside.

When asked which projects will be filming in Chicago next, Moskal responded, "Nothing is for sure yet. But there's interest without question." FOR MORE LUIS, VISIT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM/LUIS.

"It's definitely been one of the best years we've had."

NOT THEM TOO!

Dressing up as “Jersey Shore” cast members was a hot costume in Chicago this year. But what do you dress up as if you are a “Jersey Shore” cast member? Vinny and Ronnie showed up to MTV’s “The Seven” on Friday as roommates Snooki and Pauly D, respectively. The boys were pretty proud of their costumes—Vinny tweeted it was “the most epic Halloween costume ever.” The real Snooki disagreed, responding, “Really boys?”

The talented Mr. O'Brien

Strike up the band! Conan O'Brien has had the same theme song for 17 years, but he'll be switching things up on his new show, New York Magazine reports. Conan teamed up with new bandleader Jimmy Vivino to pen the song, which debuts along with the show, “Conan,” on Nov. 8.

GLAAD vs. Howard

Ron Howard tells the Los Angeles Times he's not going to take Vince Vaughn's controversial gay joke out of the upcoming movie “The Dilemma.” “I believe in sensitivity but not censorship,” the director tells the paper. The Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation released a statement criticizing the decision, according to ew.com.

“BASICALLY, I GOT MARIAH CAREY, THE HIGH-HEEL QUEEN, TO PUT ON SOME FLATS.”

Nick Cannon on his radio show, talking about persuading his pregnant wife to wear comfortable shoes, according to people.com

Smoke daddy

Did Zach Galifianakis really get high on Friday's episode of HBO's “Real Time with Bill Maher”? The bearded comedian smoked a cigarette during a conversation about California's Prop 18, which proposes legalizing marijuana in some cases. None of the other guests took a puff, though they did seem to acknowledge the smoke smelled like pot, according to nydailynews.com. Somewhere, Snoop is nodding his approval.

THE DIGIT

$24.2 MILLION

With no other new competition on Halloween weekend, “Saw 3D” opened to $24.2 million, according to an estimate from distributor Lionsgate. It easily beat “Paranormal Activity 2,” which on its second weekend in theaters dropped a hefty 59 percent to $16.5 million.
